In this series, found images pulled from the internet are used to create illustrations of gods and goddesses who are patrons of the arts and crafts. In order to create each illustration, numerous layers of composited images have been digitally cleaned, altered, combined, filtered, and painted over using wet media techniques. The artist's choice of representational style, is based on both the need to seamlessly combine photographic and illustrative elements, and a desire to respond to and reject society's growing fixation with hyper-realism. Further, each completed scene directly calls upon the places and cultures of the god-form's origins, as well as the signs and symbols attributed to each god-form.
